Manchin Inauguration Held January 17 at Capitol

“Thank you” were the sincere words that began the first several statements of West Virginia’s 34th Governor’s Inaugural Address.

Governor Joe Manchin III stated he was both humbled and honored to stand as Governor of West Virginia. He thanked and acknowledged those who had supported him in his successful gubernatorial bid, including campaign workers/volunteers/contributors, his staff, and his friend and family. He also expressed his deep appreciation to all citizens who voted in last November’s election. “And, last but certainly not least, I want to say a very special thank you to all of the people who cast a vote on November 2nd – no matter whom you cast it for. By participating in our country’s democracy, you are ensuring its survival.”

Manchin continued by recognizing the distinguished work of the many State- and national-level West Virginia officials who were present, stating that public service is the noblest of all professions, and acknowledging that we owe those who willingly serve a debt of gratitude.

The Governor promises a tough stance in his effort to better West Virginia. “The days of giving in to those who would take advantage of our State and our system of government are over. … You deserve better.” With that, he also told of his great hope in several areas. “Without hope, there can be no vision. And without vision, there can be no progress,” said Manchin. Among the many issues for which he holds hope of success and progress are better treatment and services for our citizens, progress for communities, fiscal responsibility, affordable healthcare, and saving and creating good jobs. In addition, he addressed hope for improvements in education and for a better quality of life for our seniors and veterans.

Governor Manchin quoted Abraham Lincoln, saying, “Things may come to those who wait, but only the things left over by those who hustle.” He left no question that he intended to hit the ground running. Approximately halfway into his 18-minute speech, he announced that his first official act would be to sign an Executive Order calling our State legislators into special session. The focus of the session is on some tough and pressing issues, primarily the State’s unfunded Workers’ Com-

The West Virginia Division of Culture and History and the West Virginia Commission on the Arts have announced the recipients of the 2005 Cultural Facilities and Capital Resources Grants. The grant panel reviewed applications on August 19 and funding suggestions from the panel were forwarded to the West Virginia Commission on the Arts for review on September 14. Seventeen awards were made for a total of $3,094,326.

The 17 award recipients for 2005 include Arts-link, Wetzel County, $50,000 for renovation; The Aurora Project, Inc., Preston County, $300,000 for renovation; Charles Mathena II Foundation, Mercer County, $500,000 for acquisition and construction; City of Charleston, Kanawha County, $34,147 for durable equipment; Grant County Public Library, $250,000 for new construction; Greenbrier Historical Society, Greenbrier County, $402,481 for renovations to the North House Museum; Hampshire County Historical/Arts Museum, $358,073 for renovation; Harrison County Schools, $35,000 for renovation; Historic Beverly Preservation, Randolph County, $244,885 for renovation; Main Street Point Pleasant, Mason County, $18,500 for durable equipment; Metropolitan Theatre Preservation Foundation, Monongalia County, $100,000 for renovation; Morgan Arts Council, Morgan County, $450,000 for renovation; Mountain Made Foundation, Tucker County, $124,496 for renovation; Mountain Partners in Community Development for C-HOPE, Randolph County, $72,620 for renovation; North Wheeling Community Youthbuild Center, Ohio County, $63,000 for renovation. Pricketts Fort Memorial Foundation, Marion County, $50,000 for renovation; and Step by Step, Lincoln County, $41,124 for renovation.

The panelists who reviewed the applications were selected for their expertise in accessibility, theater, compensation and pension program liabilities. Manchin believes the key to creating more good jobs is fixing the Workers’ Compensation system – in his eyes, “the Achilles heel of our State’s economy.” The Governor held true to his word, signing the order the next morning. Legislators reported on January 24 for the purpose of working on “the business of getting the state’s house in order.”

Near the end of his speech, Manchin told his audience he would like his administration to be remembered as one that promoted raising our children to be competent, caring adults. To accomplish this, he cited five promises that must be made to and kept for our children. Every child should:

- have a caring adult in his/her life
- have a safe place
- have a healthy start
- be taught a marketable skill, and
- learn to be a caring adult and be given an opportunity to serve his/her community.

As of press time, the Governor has been pleased with the work transpiring in the special session. The Senate Finance Committee has endorsed Manchin’s proposed legislation to privatize Workers’ Compensation and pay off its $3+ billion debt, and sent it to the Senate floor for voting.
West Virginia Lottery Hosts New, Improved Website

From a press release issued by the West Virginia Lottery.

The web site www.wvlottery.com has become a site to behold, according to West Virginia Lottery Director John Musgrave.

“Since the West Virginia Lottery went into cyberspace in 1996, our webpage has been praised as being user-friendly and informative by players, vendors, retailers, and researchers, alike. However, there is no site past, nor few present, that can compare with this one,” said Musgrave.

While the Lottery has introduced a number of progressive changes since 1996, the recent undertaking represents an extensive overhaul. “From top to bottom, we have utilized some of the highest levels of technology available, making the site more informative and entertaining for our customers. It’s something of which this State can truly be proud.”

Along with technology, Musgrave noted that player use has changed, as well. “In our first year, the site had around 8,000 hits a month. That monthly average is now around a million; when we have a large jackpot, the figure moves to about two million a month.”

Easy, quick, and informative, the www.wvlottery.com site is streamlined and easier to navigate. Users find less scrolling necessary for the information they seek. Musgrave outlined some of the features that can be accessed.

- Lottery retailer locations
- Historic information as to whether specific numbers have been drawn
- The percentage of time a number or set of numbers has been drawn
- Information on winners, as well as retail locations selling winning tickets
- “Database driven” winning numbers and jackpot amounts, for faster, more accurate updates
- “Database driven” information on instant game availability and the dates by which prizes must be claimed, allowing for more up to date statistics
- Keno drawing results are available 15-30 minutes after the actual drawing. Players can check their numbers or watch an animation of the drawing at home!

museums, finance, and construction. Panel members included the following individuals: Frederick A. Lambert, Ed.D., LLC, president emeritus of Oglebay Institute and consultant from Wheeling; Kevin Sutton, AIA, an architect for the federal court system from Charlotte, N.C.; and Penney Hall, APR, State Americans With Disabilities Act (ADA) Coordinator from Charleston. Commission members Pete Holloway from Wheeling and Susan Stevenson Landis from Daniels also served on the panel.

The Cultural Facilities and Capital Resources Grants program is an unusual program – one of very few in the country that offer grant opportunities for arts facility improvement and capital purchases. The goals of this program are to increase or assure public access to the arts, involve collaborations and partnerships that leverage additional public and private investment, to encourage projects that serve more than one county and to increase artistic excellence. Additional weight is given to projects that contribute to economic development; promote cultural development in rural, underserved and/or minority communities; address known health and safety deficiencies; create or improve access to facilities for working artists with disabilities; and improve, expand, or rehabilitate existing buildings for physical accessibility. Secondary priority is given to history organizations. Grants are awarded for the acquisition of real property, renovation, and/or construction of facilities, including alterations needed in order to comply with Section 504 of the 1974 Rehabilitation Act and the 1990 Americans with Disabilities Act, and for durable equipment.

Due to legislative changes in 2004, funds available for 2006 have been reduced. The deadline for applications is July 1, 2005. Applicants are encouraged to begin planning now for a 2006 application. Eligible applicants must be not-for-profit, tax-exempt West Virginia corporations or agencies of municipal or county governments, including county school boards.

News From the Medical Front

Children who grow up with a cat allowed in the bedroom reduced their asthma risk by 67% and their hay fever risk by 45%, according to a German study in Prevention. Doctors think that exposure to cat allergens may toughen up kids’ immune systems.

As always, if there are any concerns or known allergies, it’s best to consult with your physician before introducing a cat into your family. If the doctor gives the ok, it might just be the purrrrrfect solution!
