Introduction

The SIR 3000 system is a Ground Penetrating Radar (GPR) system that has been configured to easily locate rebar, conduits, voids, cables and deterioration zones in concrete, blacktop and earth and easily find underground storage tanks. It is also suitable for other non-conductive construction materials such as asphalt, soil, tiles, rock, brick, drywall, wood, etc.

Caution: StructureScan will NOT work through a sheet of metal, fine wire mesh or another conductive material.

StructureScan Components:

- 3000 radar unit,
- Model 5106 antenna operating at 200 MHz,
- Survey wheel with a pull strap,
- Radan Structure Identification software for automated data interpretation in user's PC,
- Power supplies: AC/DC adapter, 2 batteries, battery clamps and cigarette lighter adapter.

The antenna transmits short radio pulses into the structure; the returning signals are captured and displayed as a continuous vertical cross-section. These returning signals are reflections off a discrete material interface and will be an indication of a change in electrical properties. As such, the returning signal requires a degree of interpretation to ascertain the nature of the subsurface disturbance.

There are two methods for data collection using the GPR.

Real-Time Mode - The surface is scanned manually with the purpose of instantly locating targets that will be marked on the surface. The antenna, with or without survey wheel, is moved across expected targets. The target position is read off of the display and marked on the survey surface.

Area Survey Mode - In an area survey mode, a survey grid will be established. The StructureScan system has a survey wheel used to accurately log the distance along each survey line. The radar antenna will collect data while being moved along adjacent straight survey lines of the grid. Each straight line of data will be stored in a discrete file. When the entire survey area is complete, all the files will be transferred to a computer for further processing. The processing of data is done to improve data quality, extract distance and depth information as well as to map the earth or concrete condition. As a result of this procedure, a table of XYZ coordinates of each target identified in the radar data, will be created. A map of rebar depth, pavement thickness or concrete deterioration can be compiled from StructureScan results.
