RE: West Virginia Lottery Request for Information (RFI) Lot 495 for Central Video Lottery Monitoring Systems & Online and Instant Games Monitoring Systems, dated August 13, 2012

Dear Ms. Hill:

Scientific Games International, Inc. ("Scientific Games") is pleased to present our response to the West Virginia Lottery RFI for Central Video Lottery Monitoring Systems & Online and Instant Games Monitoring Systems. Scientific Games, a leading provider of lottery gaming systems, has provided that information that you requested in order to better ensure that the West Virginia Lottery has an understanding of the general levels of services and technologies provided by Scientific Games.

In accordance with paragraph 4 of the Instructions to the RFI, we submitted questions to the Lottery in advance of the August 28th deadline. We also submitted a request for an extension to the RFI response date [in light of the delay of our receipt of the RFI]. To date we have not received a response to our questions or extension request or any indication from the West Virginia Lottery as to when or if we will receive any such responses. Scientific Games would like to request the opportunity to modify our response to the RFI in the future to reflect the responses to our questions, once received.

We acknowledge that the RFI included form General Terms and Conditions and related attachments and have reviewed those documents. Due to the fact that the RFI clearly states that it is not a solicitation for bids and that the scope of work and specific requirements of the Terms and Conditions are, in large part, blank or not provided, we have not included these items in our response. Scientific Games understands the requirement to provide a Contract, including the General Terms and Conditions and all required attachments, in connection with any bid response and is happy to provide the foregoing once the specific terms and requirements are provided by the West Virginia Lottery as part of a bid solicitation process.
