Technical Question Regarding PSC10510

Question

A review of the characteristics and consequences of the other Verizon transactions reveals that the purchasing entity has faced significant competition from cable providers of telephone service in their major metropolitan markets. As a result the purchasing entity has suffered substantial customer loss. The cable providers have a regulatory advantage in this competition because the cable providers are not required to support the rural areas of the state through state-wide average rates. To create a more level playing field between the urban cable providers and the incumbent telephone carrier, that serves both the urban and rural areas, it is possible to create a state universal service fund that would support the maintenance of just and reasonable rates in rural exchanges. Do you believe that testimony regarding this issue and the possible establishment of a state universal service fund should be included in this case?

Agency Response

The Consumer Advocate Division does not believe that it is necessary or appropriate to address the issue of the establishment of a universal service fund in this proceeding.
