Addendum – PSH11017
August 18, 2010

Questions that were submitted to Purchasing

Question #1. I received your RFI earlier this week and was concerned when I read the attachment. I noticed that the duct work required sealing using a "DP2010" sealant. This concerned me because I am not sure of what the "DP2010" product is, or what part of the ductwork required sealing. Does the ductwork require sealing around the exterior (i.e. the joints, banding, etc.) or does it need to be sealed on the interior through a full surface application by a Foster's 40-20 coating or similar product? If you could please clarify this, it would be greatly appreciated. Thank you and have a nice day.

Answer #1. We must apologize, but the sealant should be a DP 1010, (not a DP2010). The DP 2010 has to do with concrete. The DP 1010 is a smooth, water based, premium quality, UL listed, high pressure/high velocity duct sealant for commercial and residential supply and return air duct use. We assume that the ductwork will be around the interior because a lot of the exterior duct work is not easy to get to. However, we have issued this RFI for vendors to give us ideas as to how to best meet the requirements to bring this facility in compliance with the various code sites on the ventilation system. All comments and suggestions are greatly appreciated.
